

John Harrod

John Harrod has documented, recorded and performed traditional music for more than 35 years. A Rhodes Scholar and retired teacher, John is widely regarded as an authority on Kentucky's traditional music. He received the 2004 Folk Heritage Award for his work in preserving traditional music. John has played with a number of bands, over the years, and currently performs with his band Kentucky Wild Horse and is kept busy, speaking and playing, across the state and beyond. John, and his wife live in rural Owen County where he teaches fiddle students there as well as in Frankfort. John Harrod retired from Frankfort High School where he taught History and English.