Next Week's Speaker

Terry Brooks is in his seventh year as Executive Director at Kentucky Youth Advocates (KYA). Kentucky Youth Advocates in the only group in the Commonwealth that focuses on children, youth and families through multiple policy lenses. That unique role means that the mission of KYA is as simple as it is profound – to make Kentucky the best place in America to be young. As the independent voice for Kentucky's children and youth for more than thirty years, KYA addresses policy issues in a variety of areas, including economic well-being, health, safety, early childhood, K-12 education, immigrant/refugee youth, and juvenile justice. Before joining KYA, Dr. Brooks served as a teacher, principal and central office senior administrator in a variety of districts throughout Kentucky. His work in education reform and leadership has been cited by a number of sources. Recent presentations include a keynote entitled "Senioritis" at the White House Summit on High Schools. After earning his doctorate, Brooks accepted the appointment of Senior Associate for Reform at the Boston-based Community Training and Assistance Center. In this position, Brooks led a team consisting of educators, business leaders, and health and human service professionals with a focus on turn-around projects in a variety of American communities. Those projects focused on community-wide health, welfare, economic development and education initiatives.
