This Week's Speaker...

The speaker for the day was Diane Dominick who was introduced by Jim Richardson. She is the director of the Advance Care Planning at End of Life program at the local hospital. Her job is to help families face end-of-life issues, and is a patient representative and liaison between families, patients, and physicians. Advanced care planning involves shared decision-making, as there is a need to decide what type of care to accept or reject. The question is when the patient has the "capacity" to make his or her own decisions and make an informed decision. With advance directives, the patient does not need a living will. The following persons will be consulted in this order about treatment options: (1) The court-appointed guardian; (2) The person holding the power of attorney; (3) Spouse; (4) Children; (5) Parents; and finally (6) The next living relative. Every case is weighed separately. The patient is free to consent or refuse medical treatment. The hospital is required by law to ask if the patient has a living will or advanced directive. 50% of patients cannot make their own decisions when near death. The hospital is bound to treat the patient, however. Unfortunately, many people avoid talking about these matters because it is so personal. For instance, children may disagree on what to do, and this all requires time and energy. You, the patient, are the only one to decide if you want a living will or advanced directive. At this point, you must decide who will be the health care surrogate – but make sure the surrogate is comfortable with making these decisions. Diane referred to the "Five Wishes" document, which was initiated in Florida. This is a very important document to help you in making end-of-life choices. It is often too late for the patient to make choices and the children often never had that vital conversation with the parent. The Five Wishes document is the best way to have that conversation. In responding to questions from the floor, she made these points: (1) Documents can be found on the Internet but one must be sure they comply with the statutes. (2) Any documents can be, but do not have to be, prepared by an attorney. (3) The decisions will always be made under the guidance of at least two physicians. (4) The document helps the family to decide whether directive treatment is to be given or withdrawn. (5) A doctor can overrule a living will, but this rarely happens. (6) It is important to have a durable power of attorney because a regular power of attorney will be revoked if the patient is disabled. By the number of questions and points raised in the discussion period it was obvious that the program was of great interest to the members. Thank you Diane and Jim for a very memorable, thought-provoking, and informative program.

Board of Directors Meeting

The board meeting will be Monday, August 16, 2004 at 5:30 p.m., RB Brown building, on Louisville Road.

This Week's Speaker...

The speaker for the day was Dr. Mary Evans Sias, president of Kentucky State University, who was introduced by Jim Richardson. She is a native of Jackson, Mississippi and noted that her county was Hinds County named after an ancestor of Charles Hinds. She stated that Kentucky State needs to grow its enrollment, and her background will aid her in this endeavor. The three Crown Jewels of the University are that it is a historically black institution, it is a liberal arts institution, and it is a liberal arts university. Historically black institutions provide undergraduate degrees for three-fourths of all black persons holding doctorate degrees, three-fourths of all black officers in the armed forces and four-fifths of all black federal judges. They are leading institutions in awarding baccalaureate degrees to black students in the life sciences, physical sciences, mathematics, and engineering. They rank high in terms of the proportion of graduates who pursue and complete graduate and professional training, and fifty percent of black faculty in traditionally white research universities received graduates. She is putting off her installation until this spring so as to do more fundraising. This is a team effort, which focuses on students first. The goal is to enable students to advance in today's job market, and KSU must build on its strengths in partnership with the community. While she wants us to be proud of KSU, she recognizes that she has a lot of work to do. She concluded her talk by stating that the Commonwealth's University is also the "Uncommon" University. In responding to questions from the floor, she stated that she is encouraging KSU professors to "cross silos" in ways to enable them to work in different areas. KSU is also producing teachers in response to the teacher shortage in the state, and is enhancing its special education and masters in education programs. Concerning sports, the University is interviewing for positions of football and basketball coaches as well as athletic director. The aim is also to upgrade faculty salaries and improve morale and bring up the low minimum salaries to the market rate. Thank you Dr. Sias for a most insightful program into current undertakings at Frankfort's institution for higher education.

their bachelor degrees there. There is at least one land grant institution in every state, which creates broader expectation in society that the university exists to help society address its problems and has outreach programs with a mandate for openness and accessibility. In the mid-1800s, the only institutions were private universities. In 1862, President Lincoln gave 10,000 acres to the states to educate the masses. KSU has strong land grant programs such as aquaculture to teach farmers how to grow fish. The land grant mission is an integral part of who we are. The liberal arts college has small classes and has a challenging interdisciplinary and multicultural curriculum, a faculty devoted to undergraduate education, and a community spirit among faculty and students. It offers scholarships, opportunities for travel abroad, paid internships, and participation in state, regional and national conferences. KSU is a university for all people, and both the faculty and students are diverse. From diversity comes strength. There are currently about 2400 students with an aim for 3600 students. Each member of this community has a responsibility to help KSU grow. The University is presently restoring Young Hall, and challenges are being overcome relative to an inadequate number of graduate programs and ineffective budgetary procedures. Here are some of the other improvements: (1) The number of schools has been decreased from five to three. (2) A dean has been added to the graduate program. (3) Computer programs have been added. (4) Bachelor of Arts programs have been added. (5) Nursing programs have been increased. (6) Masters in education programs have been added. (7) The retention rate for students is increasing. (8) The University is adding new programs and strengthening academic programs. (9) New dormitories will be built. (10) The University is improving the recruitment of Kentucky students. (11) The University is streamlining delivery services and as it increases services and networking. Today, being a KSU graduate is something to be proud of. Leaders of both the community and within the state are KSU

Melinda is a graduate of Western Hills High School, Georgetown College (BA) and the University of Kentucky Graduate School College of Social Work (MSW). She has been a Hospice employee since 1993, and is Mom to Joshua (5) and Olivia (4).

Hospice exists to provide support and care for persons in the last phase of an incurable disease so that they can live as fully and comfortably as possible. Dying is recognized as a normal process, and death is neither hastened nor postponed. Hospice, which is not a place but a concept of care, exists in the hope and belief that, through appropriate care and the promotion of a caring community sensitive to their needs, patients and families may be free to attain a degree of mental and spiritual preparation for death that is satisfactory to them.

This Week's Speaker...

The speaker for the day was Betty Creek, trust manager for the Kentucky Funeral Directors Association and was introduced by Jim Richardson. She spoke about pre-planning funerals and how the money is deposited with the funeral home, which in turn must deposit 100% of the money into the trust. At present, about $115 million is on deposit for pre-planning of funerals. Pre-planning makes final arrangements with the funeral home and removes a burden from the family during very difficult times. The funeral director will talk to you about the importance of pre-planning, and it is just another thing to plan for in advance like retirement. Pre-planning a funeral should be considered just like you would buy a life insurance policy. Unfortunately, most people resist thinking about these things, and the decisions are then made in times of stress and sorrow. The foundation of an estate plan is a will, and one decision an executor must make is deciding on the right funeral home. Pre-planning for a funeral should be considered along with any other financial planning decision. Pre-planning involves two stages: Prearrangement and pre-financing. Prearrangement involves: (1) The wishes of the family. (2) The affairs of the estate. (3) The type of funeral services. (4) A contract with the funeral director. The benefits are that the wishes of the family will be realized, the funeral is planned for in advance, and the peace of mind it gives. The benefits of pre-financing involve (1) There are funds to pay for the funeral. (2) All expenses are covered and this provides for a hedge against inflation. For example, the interest that is earned exceeds the rate of inflation. (3) The survivors are relieved of the expenses. The investors are fully protected since 100% of the proceeds are invested with the trust or an insurance policy. An annual report is made to the consumer protection division of the Office of the Attorney General and the books of the funeral homes are audited annually. Who should consider prearrangement? (1) Individuals with no close living relatives. (2) People who move away from home but wish to have their memorial services back in their hometown. (3) Parents who wish to give their children guidance as to their wishes to make sure they are honored. (4) People applying for SSI or Medicaid. It is important to note that the prearrangement funds are exempt from one's estate for SSI purposes. It is also important to note that this is an irrevocable trust which is not limited to a particular funeral home, and that the account can be transferred to another funeral home upon adequate notice. She recounted from one of her personal experiences of an aunt who pre-planned her funeral in 1989 and deposited $4800. Upon her recent death this amount had increased to $11,000! A refund was given, which was then turned into other useful purposes like education expenses for relatives. With pre-planning, the funeral director will do everything, even arranging for a memory board. The funeral director will always be attentive to the family's wishes. Thank you Ms. Creek for a most informative program about planning for the inevitable.

This Week's Speaker...

The speaker for the day was Melinda Simpson with Hospice who started out by giving a brief history of the Hospice program. Hospice of the Bluegrass was begun in the late '80s by a group of volunteers and physicians whose philosophy is that death is just another part of life. We must simply let nature take its course, but the mission of Hospice is to give comfort in different ways whether it is physical, emotional, or spiritual. The aim is to let patients and their families have as much control as possible. Hospice provides services for people with terminal diagnoses where a physician certifies that the patient has six months or less to live. Past the six-month period, Hospice care is still available as long as the illness is progressive. The patient may be at home or with nursing services, and all volunteers work as a team. The patient and family are part of that team. The registered nurse provides the eyes and ears for the patient and helps that patient communicate with the doctor when visits to a physician's office may not be practicable. Hospice also deals with pain management to provide as much comfort as possible. Hospice teaches how to keep a loved one at home and empowers the families to care for the patient. The goal is to honor the patient's wishes by keeping the patient at home through empowering the family. Although a nurse will usually come about once a week, nurses are always available 24/7 to provide support services. Hospice also has social workers with master level degrees that can help with questions for people who have never before cared for a terminally ill patient. The social worker is also a skilled counselor. Many times, a person will find that he or she has a terminal illness with a routine check-up with a doctor, which gives little time for preparedness. Hospice is there to step in and help under such circumstances. It should be stated that Hospice does not emphasize death and dying, but emphasizes the quality of life. For example, a volunteer may take a patient on a fishing trip. There is a commitment here to helping families have a good experience and all is not gloom and doom. A social worker is also trained in helping with bills. For example, an explanation of benefits from an insurance company may be misinterpreted as a bill. A chaplain is also available who does not represent a particular denomination. People may feel more comfortable sharing with the Hospice chaplain who will only see him or her for a relatively short period of time. The chaplain will administer to spiritual needs but will coordinate with local ministers if needed. Volunteers are an integral part of the team and these volunteers are screened and interviewed. Volunteers can also work various shifts so that the primary caregiver can continue to work at a job to make ends meet. A bereavement counselor is also available at no charge, and they have master level degrees. Last year about 1200 counseling sessions were held locally in the Frankfort office alone. There are even support groups in the schools to help children deal with parental loss. Bereavement services are available to the entire community and not just to Hospice families. The Hospice worker will help the primary caregiver to step in and do the job and Hospice will work with any type of illness and age group. The money to fund Hospice is available through Medicare and Medicaid, and will pay for any medication related to the terminal diagnosis. Private health insurance will often match the Medicare benefit or will contract for a certain rate. However, no one is denied Hospice services due to an inability to pay. Memorial donations are also a significant source of funding. Thank you Melinda for a most informative program on the tremendous work Hospice does in the Frankfort community.
