Next Week's Speaker...

Lashé D. Mullins is the curator at of the White Hall State Historic Site in Richmond, and this summer will make her 19th summer working at the site. However her history with White Hall dates further back, as her family has farmed the land around the mansion for decades. She holds a master's in history and this past fall published a book with her husband titled "A History of White Hall: House of Clay."

In 1799, Revolutionary War veteran General Green Clay finished construction on a stately Georgian mansion he named Clermont. The home became a statewide symbol of prosperity, housing the farm of one of the largest landowners in the Commonwealth. Renamed White Hall by Cassius Marcellus Clay and renovated by his wife, Mary Jane Warfield Clay, it remained in the family for generations. Here Cassius M. Clay became known as the "Lion of White Hall," penning his fiery speeches against slavery and launching his career as an outspoken statesman. After years of restoration, White Hall became a state historic site in 1971. Now, "A History of White Hall" offers a detailed look inside the expertly preserved structure and the people who helped shape its fascinating history.
