Next Week's Program...

J. Larry Hood is presently a teacher of four courses a year for the University of Kentucky's Osher Life-long Learning Institute. He has integrated knowledge of other disciplines (business, English, government) and his own personal and family history of Kentuckians in the courses. Larry's personal and family history takes in broad areas of Kentucky's and America's culture: rural and urban life, tobacco farming; industrial work; management and labor issues; war; Democrats and Republicans; government work and the role of government in Kentucky. He does this to facilitate student appreciation of the relevance of national and state history to daily local and national events.
