Next Week's Program...

Next week's speaker will be Mary Hamilton with the Kentucky Storytelling Association.

Mary's early adventures in storytelling led to a note on her report card, trips to the confessional, and smiles of delight on the faces of her third-grade classmates. When it was Mary's turn to stand in from of her class and tell what she had done over the weekend, she didn't hesitate to describe how she rode her horse bareback. Carefully she used her hands to demonstrate how she slid off the rump of her galloping horse, barely grabbing the tail. She showed them how she struggled to climb the tail, and then held tight to the mane to finish her ride. The story was most convincing, especially from a girl who owned no horse. While her classmates were thrilled, her teacher recognized a disturbing lack of truth in need of correction instead of talent in need of encouragement and direction. A note to Mary's parents resulted in reminders that telling stories was sinful. For years Mary confessed her sins and struggled to overcome her talent. Thank goodness, she failed.

In 1983, after brief careers as high school English teacher and public library librarian, Mary embraced professional storytelling. With her ever-expanding repertoire, Mary delights audiences throughout the country, telling tales in a straightforward "just talking" style. Yes, she still uses her hands to help tell the tale.

Today, when Mary takes the stage, the show unfolds in the hearts and minds of her audiences just as it did for her classmates. Mary entertains adults, families and children with Kentucky tales, world folk and fairy tales.

Mary's storytelling is listed in the Kentucky Performing Arts Directory, a juried directory of Kentucky's finest performers. The Kentucky Humanities Council presents Mary's work through their Speakers Bureau.
